- Top Priority right now is getting a piece of paper that says i am good at something. A certification of some sort that allows me to get a job offer. Welping AAS. ~~as~~ as it were. I have committed myself to finally finishing a college level program. Taking as many credits as I know I can handle without overloading myself. That's always the first step in the downward crash.

- It seems that McCordless took his education for granted. He was able to complete his degree with little to no hardship. A BA or BS from any college or university, let alone Emory, would be a blessing for a large percentage of the US. International education availability is a whole other subject.
